Architecture isn't just about designing buildings. According to Sean Hegstad, architect at Haven Design Workshop, it goes much deeper than that.

"Before we start talking about a style of building, we ask what their style of living is. If it will be a residence, how do they like to interact with family and friends? If it is a business, what is the flow, how do their employees work with one another? The most important part of architecture is being a good listener."

Apparently, their clients agree:

C. G. – "Sean's experience and calm demeanor helped to steer the design/revision process emerging with plans that perfectly reflected our style AND lifestyle."

S. C. – "Sean and his team were a pleasure to work with, they always listened to what I wanted to achieve."
